should be about five feet ten inches in length and be under rather than over strength. The bow which is too heavy to bend gracefully and easily will strain the archer's back.

Mrs. Hornblow. In 1873, was the first woman to make archery popular for women, and to her belongs the honor of having demonstrated that the bow really was a "weapon" very much adapted to women. She said that it would make the most awkward girl graceful with but a little practice. Her own skill with the bow and arrow is historic. Many times she has been set by women since then.

There is no outdoor sport unless it is hand ball which costs as little to play as archery, and yet archery seems to be enjoyed almost exclusively by the rich and the royal.

Why this should be is quite unexplainable. There is no expensive costume necessary. Your everyday sport clothes is costume enough, with a leather guard on your arm and a pair of leather gloves on your hands. Your bow need not cost more than $3 and a target can be had for 65 cents. The physical advantages of a game cannot be overestimated. Archery is especially beneficial for women because it is not vigorous and not strenuous, and yet it brings all the muscles generally into action. The back is strengthened and straightened, the chest is broadened, the lungs are increased in capacity and the soothing effect which it has for the nerves is unequalled. Accurate shooting depends upon steadiness of nerves and steadiness of eye and upon a certain quick calculation of the brain in discounting wind, speed and the atmosphere. The best arrows are those whose weight is adapted to the power of the bow.

Newport society has it that cabs are to return to favor again, that next season behold them in full swing the discarded horse.

will come into his own again. So insistently has been the summer's demand for laughing men, with the names of New Zealand and Australian regiments on their shoulders, who were walking on their knees, not one among them had a foot left. They were cheery, looked healthy and seemed to have no care. They had finished with war, and apparently had no fear for the future. But then the reflection comes, that men like these are just now being cared for and looked after and fêted and petted by every one. In a few years' time, however, when things have settled down and the world is going through its course of reconstruction, what will be their fate? With examples like these to think of, how can any one with any sort of imaginative quality, fail to ponder over what may be?

Gluck

Hawaiian music has come into a new glory!

Up and down the United States, more or less everybody has been singing, playing or whistling that most popular of all Hawaiian songs "Aloha Oe" (Farewell to Thee).

And now Alma Gluck has made a Victor Record of it. Great artist that she is, she sings it with such fascinating effect that you say to yourself: "I never knew before how really beautiful that song is."

Paderewski's Minuet played by Paderewski himself

For every one who plays the piano, for every one who loves its music, here is a record of records!

The startling brilliancy of Paderewski's technique will cause the veriest layman to marvel. And long after the master's last note has died away the lovely melody of the Minuet is likely to haunt you.

cabs at Newport that the old cabbies who went through all the throes of practice necessary to turn out perfect chauffeurs are now selling off their automobiles and again gladly acquiring cabs.

Manuel, late of Portugal, who is quite a cheery, chubby specimen of ex-kingship, is very seldom seen in London now-a-days.

Home of An Uncrowned King. When he is not sunning himself at seaside resorts, he spends most of his time playing tennis at his charming place at Richmond, where he lives with his very popular mother, ex-Queen Amelie of Portugal, and his wife, the ex-Queen Augusta Victoria.

For obvious reasons, comments a London writer, this lady is seldom seen away from her own home. I am told that she is entirely properly in feeling and home life; but it is impossible not to remember her parentage. Therefore Augusta Victoria may be said to lead an almost cloistered existence within the four walls of her husband's pretty estate.

I have seen her once or twice recently, driving in Richmond Park. She does not look too happy or satisfied with the world. She is always very smartly dressed, and has a most elegant carriage of the head and shoulders. She would, indeed, be extremely good looking were it not for her nose, which is of a portentous size, and juts out from her forehead in a most curious line that reminds one of the prow of a battleship.

I am told that she is agreeable and amusing, but her English is much too foreign in accent to permit of her conversation being heard outside her own special domain. She talks French, however, fluently, and this is the home language of the uncrowned king in his English retreat.

Every other Tuesday afternoon at the Savoy Hotel, London, the huge ballroom is given up to the use of wounded soldiers from various hospitals up to about 400 in number. They are invited there to tea by different hostesses, who ply them with good fare. They also provide a cheering entertainment for the broken warriors, and do their best to give them a thorough after-dinner amusement.

Lady Mainstone, writes an English woman, was the hostess on one of these tea afternoons, on another occasion Mrs. Samuel Newhouse played hostess, while Mrs. Waldorf Astor dispensed her smiles and her hospitality upon still another occasion.

The atmosphere of the gathering and the extraordinary impressive sight of hundreds of maimed men in hospital due, sitting patiently at ten in this white-and-gold apartment that once upon a time was the center of pre-war revelry, is intensely and persistently pathetic.

Such a sight makes one realize exactly what is happening, even more than a visit to one or other of the great hospitals of England. In a hospital you expect to see sorrowful sights, and much that is painful, but in a ballroom where men are gathered in such numbers, all with the same bond of a common cause and a common suffering among them, it gives a far to one's heart and intelligence that is very poignant.

I saw, for instance, a terrible procession of ten or twelve broad-shouldered,
